

Acknowledgments

I am indebted to many people for their assistance during the research and writing of this work. Richard Fletcher, OOCEA chairman during the construction of the Bee Line and planning of the East-West Expressway, Phil Reece, who held the same position during planning and design of the 1986 Project, and A. Wayne Rich, chairman from 1992 through 1999, furnished valuable information from their different vantage points. OOCEA staff members Gregory Dailer, Jorge Figueredo, Steve Pustelnyk, and Susan Simon were generous in sharing their knowledge with me. Gregory Dailer and Steve Pustelnyk helped me in locating documents from the vast collections on file in the OOCEA offices.

Executive Director Harold Worrall graciously took time from his busy schedule to help me on numerous occasions. William B. McKelvy and Charles C. Sylvester, who have both worked with the old State Road Department, the FDOT, and the OOCEA since the 1950s, shared with me their vast knowledge of road building in Florida. Gerald Brinton, former executive director of the Seminole County Expressway Authority, helped me to understand the SCEA's role in building the GreeneWay. Donald Erwin, Mike Bierma, Keith Jackson, and Bonnie Eichenberg of PBS&J provided generous assistance.

I am further indebted to Darleen Mazzillo, Vicki Coleman, and Patricia Varela of the OOCEA, and Carla Gregory of PBS&J, for the pleasant manner with which they tolerated my many requests for help.

I also wish to thank Jean Yothers, former curator of the Orange County Historical Museum, for her assistance in obtaining rare photographs.

Jerrell Shofner

Jerrell H. Shofner, professor of history emeritus at the University of Central Florida, is the author of Nor Is It Over Yet: Florida in the Era of Reconstruction; Daniel Ladd: Merchant Prince of the Florida Frontier; Jefferson County, Florida; Jackson County, Florida; Brevard County, Florida; Apopka and Northwest Orange County; Orlando: The City Beautiful; Florida Portrait and A History of Altamonte Springs as well as many articles in scholarly journals.

He was awarded the Rembert W. Patrick Prize for his Nor Is It Over Yet and Jefferson County. He is also the five-time recipient of the Florida Historical Society's Arthur W. Thompson Prize and the Frederick W. Weyerhauser Prize for an article in Forest History. He lives with his wife, Frances, in Winter Springs, Florida.